HOME FOR DESTITUTE CATHOLIC CHILDREN,
HARRISON AVENUE

Boston, January 13, 1881.

THE Home has now been in existence in this city for over sixteen years, and during all that time no destitute or neglected child has ever been turned from its doors. Night and day it has been open for the children of the poor of this great city, without money and without price.

No child is admitted who is not destitute; those who have friends and money are refused admission, that the institution may not degenerate into a mere boarding-place, and be perverted from the design of its founders, which, when the Home originated, was to keep at least one institution in this city for the protection of poor children, under the auspices of the Catholic portion of the community, absolutely charitable and solely for those whose friends and natural protectors are unable to maintain them.

The Directors of the Home have always jealously guarded the institution from the danger consequent on the admission of children on condition of payment of their board by their friends or others; for the room such children would take up is required for the purely destitute, and the practice of receiving board money in a home ostensibly dedicated and devoted to charity is inconsistent with the spirit of charity, and pernicious in its results to any institution intended to be a charity solely.

The sympathy and support of the charitable is alienated when the spirit of trade and traffic undermines and supplants the spirit of charity in any institution. The great defect in the management of establishments for poor children is the disposition to accumulate and retain them under the plea that they need religious instruction and a rudimentary school-training before being sent back to the world; and so they are held until oftentimes great injustice is done them, and their welfare, instead of being advanced, is retarded or defeated by their unfitness to take their part in the struggles of life, owing to their lack of knowledge of the world.

The Directors of the Home corporation have always felt it a sacred duty to provide every child coming under its protection with a place in some good family, as speedily as possible, where, under the influence, training, and example of the heads of a household, the child may gradually be educated to discharge the duties and bear cheerfully the burdens and cares of life. The life a child is necessarily compelled to lead for any length of time in a charitable institution is an unnatural one, and very unlikely to encourage the growth of self-dependence or self-help.

Many of the thousands of boys and girls provided with good homes, under the policy of the managers of this institution, are now grown to be useful and practical men and women, instead of being comparatively helpless and unfit to properly perform the duties of their stations in life. In an economical point of view, this policy of the Directors has also worked admirably, as it has kept down the annual expenses of the institution, and enlarged its capacity to receive and temporarily provide for the objects of their care.

Nothing can afford more real pleasure to the charitable than the transformation which takes place in a few hours in the appearance of a destitute or neglected child rescued, in its grimy, hungry, barefoot, and unkempt condition, from a wicked and filthy neighborhood and placed in the Home, where the child is immediately bathed, freshly clad, fed, and made happy. A jewel found encrusted with dirt, in some foul place in the streets or alleys, and by some skilful hand cleaned, polished, and restored to its setting, would best illustrate the transformation of a child from the dark haunts of vice and misery to a home of order and decency.

The children of the Home come from the poor of all classes, but are received so young that it is rare to find one of them with criminal habits, or unsafe to adopt in any family. It has been the practice of the Directors, from the beginning of the institution, to require of any applicant for a child, to furnish a letter of recommendation from the applicant's parish priest, certifying that the person applying is a suitable person to care for the child, and has a proper home in which to bring him up.

Where a child is given on such a certificate, it is expected the pastor will see he is properly treated, and report any neglect to the institution. In some cases it has been found that pastors certified to the fitness of persons from favorable impressions of them, rather than after careful inquiry and reflection. Abuses grew out of several of these cases, which have been corrected, and certificates are now given to persons with the exercise of greater caution.

The causes of destitution and neglect of young children are easily traced. When labor is readily obtained, and except in the cases of ill-health, or insanity, in the heads of families, and a comparatively few cases of great improvidence in the expenditure of earnings, the excessive use of intoxicating liquor is undoubtedly the main cause of destitution in the class the Home has to deal with. If the vice of drunkenness could be eradicated, the burden of providing for destitute children would not be nearly as heavy as it is on the community.

There were, on September 30, 1879, 20,021 male and female paupers dependent upon the State, cities, and towns for aid, in Massachusetts, not including those taken care of in private charitable institutions. Of this large number there were in the public institutions for Boston alone, an average of 1,300 inmates, while the number of poor persons also relieved or partially supported by it for the year was 16,000. In the private institutions of this city, at the same time, there must have been nearly as many as in the public establishments, and it is safe to say this condition of things remains substantially unchanged.

In the public institutions of the State itself, and of the cities and towns of the State, there were, on September 30, 1879, about 1,000 pauper children under sixteen years of age.

At the State Primary School for children, at Monson, and at the State Alms-House at Tewksbury, there were, on January 1, 1880, 571 pauper children, nearly all of whom are of Catholic parentage, many of them from our large cities and towns, where the Catholic communities have wholly neglected their duty in not providing for them, and have abandoned them to the charity of the State, which is necessarily compelled to find them homes, when those to whom they are allied by blood and the ties of religion cease to provide for or to protect them.

It is in the power of every Catholic parish in this State to provide for its destitute children by organizing associations for that purpose, and either boarding the children out until they find families in which to adopt them, or by establishing in each city and town a small house or refuge, leased or built for the purpose, which one or two women could take care of, under the direction of the pastor and a local association.

In cases where the number of poor children is small in two or more adjoining towns, the towns should unite in making one house or home serve as a refuge for the poor children of each place; the expense to be shared on the basis of the number of children provided for from each town.

It is a shame that in many well-to-do Catholic communities of the cities and large towns of the State, there is still no organized effort made to save destitute and neglected children from want, by private means and without affixing the badge of pauperism to them. There can be no reasonable excuse for the large Catholic communities of the State to neglect their duty in this respect any longer.

If members of the conferences of Saint Vincent de Paul, the Sunday School teachers, and other active lay persons in each parish will unite in moving in the matter, they can soon accomplish all that is required,—the much-needed local homes for poor children. If they knew the blighting influence on children which the almshouse and surroundings of a mere pauper institution exercise, they would not have delayed the work so long.

The Directors of the Home have a two-fold object in referring to this matter: first, to prevent the towns and cities of the State from appealing as often as they do to this institution to take care of children who become destitute among them, when they should be provided for by the parishes to which they belong; the second reason is, it is time the Catholic communities neglecting the great duty of charity towards their poor children should be alive to the importance of it, and make an effort to save the children from the saddening influences of pauper life.

Much of the work of this institution is given, not merely to the reception of children and providing homes for them, but many children are taken and kept for awhile, during the illness and temporary distress or misfortunes of their parents, so that family ties may, as far as possible, not be sundered. The criminal courts of the city are visited by the Superintendent of the Home, that the children of those who have become destitute and criminal may be rescued from the fate which awaits them from such parents. Perhaps the best test of the usefulness of the Home would be to consider what would become of the hundreds of poor children it provides for, should it cease its work.

What became of the thousands of poor children of the Catholic community of Boston before the Home was established we all know; the proselytizer had the field substantially to himself, and the children grew up with their names changed, their identity lost, and the ties of kindred and the church parted, if not severed forever.

It should be here stated that the Home discourages sectarian antipathies, and makes no distinction of race, color, or religion, except that in the matter of religion, when receiving a child not of Catholic parentage, it is careful to obtain the consent and approval of its relatives to the child's admission, that the charge of proselytizing, which has been made against so-called undenominational institutions, may not be made justly against the Home.

To avoid even the suggestion that this corporation is not purely charitable in character towards all, the Directors have it seriously under consideration to apply to the Legislature for a change of its present corporate name, which has been and is, "The Association for the Protection of Destitute Roman Catholic Children in Boston." The name is objectionable on another ground also, that it is so long, and difficult for persons to remember in communicating with the institution, or transacting any business with it.

The building erected and occupied for the Home is in a central part of Boston, opposite the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and Boston College, on Harrison Avenue, with the City Hospital, the Homœopathic Hospital, and the New England Female Medical College adjoining it. The building is well adapted to its purpose, is three stories in height, and has also a French roof; it is nearly 200 feet in length, and about 50 feet in depth, and is furnished with all the modern conveniences of steam heat, a hot and cold water supply, a good bakery, laundry, and convenient arrangements for cooking, as well as good bathing-rooms, and in the upper story of each wing an infirmary.

The lot of land on which the building stands has a frontage of 200 feet on Harrison Avenue, and extends back between two cross streets to a depth of 250 feet, open on all sides. The light and ventilation are all that could be desired. One wing of the building is devoted to the use of the boys, and the other to the girls, while the centre is used for the administration of the affairs of the Home, and for divine worship in a suitable chapel over the main hall.

In appealing to the different parishes of the city and vicinity for contributions to maintain the Home, which, it should always be remembered, depends from day to day on the generosity and charity of the public, the Directors think it but proper to bring to the notice of the different parishes that the institution is giving them practical help in providing for their children who suffer from want and neglect, and that some measure of immediate benefit accrues to every parish for its assistance rendered the institution.

The following table will show the number of children credited to each of the parishes named, for the time set forth:—

* Five of these were taken from the Baldwin Place Home for Little Wanderers.

The average number of children daily in the Home during the year 1879 was 148, at an annual average cost per capita of $69.16, which includes salary of superintendent, wages of domestics, fuel, water rates, repairs, food and clothing, and all other expenses of the institution, except the interest on the mortgage debt. During the year 1880 the daily average number of children in the Home was 141.

The annual statements of the Treasurer of the corporation of receipts and expenditures for the years 1879 and 1880 and the Reports of the Superintendent for the same time are given separately at the beginning of this Report.

During the period of time covered by this printed Report (two years), no death occurred among the children in the Home, though it will be seen that more than 700 were under the roof and protection of the Home from time to time during that period.

Since the corporation was organized it has provided in the Home for 4,082 children, and has furnished out-door relief also to thousands of others. It is now burdened with a mortgage debt of $45,000, the interest on which amounts to $2,700 per annum. During the year 1879 the total actual expense of managing the institution was $12,853.59, inclusive of the interest payable on the mortgage; and the total actual expense for 1880 was $12,281.98, also including the interest on the mortgage debt.

Since the publication of the last printed Report of the institution, two members of the corporation died,—Mr. Henry J. Slavin, who was elected in 1878 and died July 20, 1879, and Mr. Michael Gorman, who was elected in 1877 and died June 6, 1880. They were both much esteemed by the Directors, and always evinced great interest in the work of the Home. Sister Paschal, one of the Sisters of Charity of the institution, died October 12, 1880, much to the regret of the community and Directors. Serving God in the most acceptable manner, by succoring suffering little children for His sake, He at last called her to her eternal reward, and has left her name and her memory to be cherished by those who saw in her, while living, that which made her an edifying example of the true Sister of Charity.

While the corporation and management of the Home has been left almost wholly to the care and under the supervision of lay persons, they have always recognized the advantage of the spiritual influence of those devoted to religion who are over the children, and the necessity of having the pious Sisters of Charity in charge of the domestic affairs of the institution. What was once an experiment has long ago become the established and successful policy of the management. The arrangement for the division of duties and responsibilities between the Sisters and corporators has always worked harmoniously, and to the advancement of the great object both have in view.

The thanks of the Sisters and Directors are due to Dr. Finn, Visiting Physician, for his regular professional attendance on the inmates; to Dr. Derby, the distinguished oculist; and to the physicians of the City Hospital, for professional services, always given generously to the institution when called upon.

Something should also be said in acknowledgment of the kindness of the children of St. Joseph's Sunday-school, Boston, who recently gave the Home a Christmas offering of $100. Our friends in Brockton annually remember our poor children by sending to us contributions of clothing, fruit, and vegetables. The Metropolitan Horse Railroad, on several occasions during the year, kindly gave the children and Sisters the use of their horse-cars for the excursions given the inmates of the Home by Manager William Weeks, of the Nahant Steamboat Co., Mr. Harvey T. Litchfield, of the Nantasket Steamers, and Capt. Phillips and Mr. Henry A. McGlennen, of the steamer Empire State, during the last summer.

The managers feel much indebted also to the ladies now earnestly engaged in endeavoring to assist the institution in the Fair for its benefit, which opened in December, and is now promising to be very successful.

The future of the Home and its policy in the care of the children who may come under its charge is a constant subject of consideration for the corporation; and, should the necessities of the poor increase their demands on the Home, instead of enlarging the present building it may be thought advisable to make it a place of reception for children, from which they may be sent out temporarily to board in good approved families in the country, until they can be adopted out, and permanent places can be found for them; thus imitating a system tried successfully for the past two years in Great Britain, and there operating so far admirably, and at almost the same cost as in an institution, with the advantage to the child in each case of avoiding the unwholesome consequences which sometimes follow from institution life, in opposition to life in the family. Should the plan work well, it would save much of the expense communities are put to in erecting large buildings for private charities in the great cities of the country.

In conclusion, the Directors, while thanking the benefactors of the Home for their generous support at all times, again solicit and urge their co-operation in its work among those who do not yet fully appreciate the need of properly maintaining, in this great city, a house always open for its orphaned and destitute children.

Donations in money, provisions, cast-off clothing, etc., may be left at the Home, corner of Harrison Avenue and Concord Street, which is open at all hours to receive such articles.

Persons wishing to adopt children will apply at the Home. They must furnish recommendations from their parish priest that they will give the children good homes, and educate them. Pastors, before recommending persons desiring to obtain children from the Home, are requested to inquire into the circumstances of the applicants, and ascertain if their purpose is purely for self-interest or for the sake of charity.
